"This picturesque timbered gatehouse, built at the beginning of the seventeenth century, is decorated with carvings of Adam and Eve, the serpent and the forbidden fruit. It is the only part of Stokesay Castle that is occupied. The name dates from William the Conqueror's time, when a dairy form, or 'stoke' was given to the Say family. The present moated building, one of the finest fortified manor houses in England, was built in about 1290 by a wealthy clothier., Lawrence de Ludlow, to combat threats from the Welsh borders. It was garrisoned during the Civil War (1642-46) by Lord Craven, a royalist, but fell without a struggle and was undamaged. It was then neglected until John Hallcroft, MP for Worcester, bought it in 1869 and restored it. It has not been fully occupied since. The building was modelled by both Willow Art and Leadbeater Art ... Although at first glance similar in size and colouring, there are minor variations in the moulds. The leaded windows in the façade of the Willow Art model are inset, and the roof extends along the gutter below the gable window., features not apparent on the Leadbeater version. However, the latter does have a more detailed chimney and wood framework which makes it distinctive. (Collecting Miniature Coloured Cottages by Sam & Maggie Seabrook, New Cavendish Books, 1996)

84. Old Ostrich Inn Colnbrook

125.00

Ostrich Inn is said to be the fourth oldest inn in the country, but records dating from 1106 suggest it may actually be the oldest. During the Middle Ages it was often used by guests to change, before arriving at Windsor Castle. It was rebuilt in 1500 of timber and plaster, with a red tiled roof and a projecting upper storey with gables at either end ... In 1635 Colnbrook received a charter which included provision for a weekly covered market, as well as for a 'pie powder' court, which was held in the Ostrich Inn. These were wayfarers' courts - from the French pieds poudreux, meaning dusty footed – which had summary powers over buyers and sellers who were there temporarily. However, a few years later, during the Civil War, it lost its charter and reverted to village status ... It later achieved notoriety when an innkeeper named Jarman was alleged to have murdered some 60 people by tipping sleeping travellers into a cauldron of boiling water ... A rare model by Willow Art ... (Collecting Miniature Coloured Cottages by Sam & Maggie Seabrook, New Cavendish Books, 1996)

87. Old Mint House Pevensey		100.00
88. Tan House Little Stretton		50.00
89. St Bernards Monastery Coalville	Coalville Leicestershire	75.00
90. Wilberforce Museum Hull		75.00

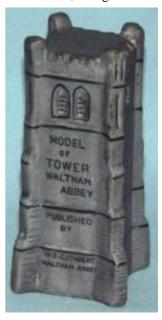

"William Wilberforce was born in this house, overlooking the quay at Hull in 1759. It had been built by John Lister in 1600 and King Charles I had stayed there in 1639. By 1709 the house was owned by the Thornton family, who were in the export business. William Wilberforce was apprenticed to Thornton and later marries his master's daughter, Sarah, in 1711. Their grandson William, with whom we are concerned, was born in a first-floor room on 24 August 1759. William Wilberforce, though frail in health, became MP for Hull in 1787, he became involved with a society for the suppression of the Slave Trade. Despite threats to his life, in 1797, as well as getting married, he published a book stating that the religious system of the upper classes was against the tenets of true Christianity. The Bill for the abolition of the slave trade was finally passed in 1806. Later, as MP for Yorkshire, he spoke in the debate in 1824 on the abolition of slavery. The bill to abolish slavery in the colonies passed its second reading in July 1833 with Wilberforce dying three days later. The house was opened as a museum and memorial to him in 1906. The model by Willow Art is a simple grey with a long inscription. It measures 11.3cm wide, 4.5cm deep and 8.5cm high." (Collecting Miniature Coloured Cottages by Sam & Maggie Seabrook, New Cavendish Books, 1996)

91. Waltham Abbey Tower

100.00

92. Leicester Hospital Warwick (A) wording on back fading 93. Red Hall Bourne

100.00 125.00

"... Red Hall, a handsome Tudor house of brick and stone, was erected towards the end of the sixteenth century (possibly by Gilbert Fischer) on the double pile principle. It has four rooms on the ground floor comprising a hall, dining parlour, kitchen and buttery; four bedrooms upstairs, and a lofty gallery and other rooms. Sir Everard Digby, executed as one of the chief conspirators in the Gunpowder Plot of 1605, lived here, and this may have been the place where the plot was actually hatched. The estate was sold to the Bourne-Essendine Railway in 1860and became an important railway junction when it was absorbed by the Great Northern Railway in 1864. Red Hall became the station master's house. After the railway closed, the building's future was in doubt, until it was bought by the Bourne United Charities, who restored it and opened it to the public in 1972. The model by Willow Art has details on three sides, measures 8.3ck long, 6.7cm deep and 7cm high., and is extremely rare." (Collecting Miniature Coloured Cottages by Sam & Maggie Seabrook, New Cavendish Books, 1996)
